Food for Faith, a Christian teaching and media ministry based in Los Angeles, has released a fresh new addition to the growing internet e-book landscape. Rain is a Preject, the world's first 'preject' novel, follows the transformation of Rain Reynolds, a New York City public school legend, from immortal basketball icon to enlightened spiritual emissary. And, as usual, the way to enlightenment goes straight through the dark.

"I want people to know that the life of faith is worth it," explains Earl Middleton, the author of Rain is a Preject, and founder of Food for Faith. "In our culture, faith is often depicted as a neat little one-size-fits-all box. In this story, the main character confronts real issues, including a heretofore unnamed condition, trudges through many of life's sewers, and eventually comes out on the other side with a tested, relevant faith, and a conviction that life was meant to be lived God's way."

The book tackles a previously unnamed condition now called 'prejection,' which afflicts an estimated 100 million Americans. "A preject is a parental reject," Middleton points out. "We come from all walks of life. Every color, creed, nation, language, gender & culture is represented in the preject community, which has suffered in silent anonymity until now. This book offers the good news to prejects that God knows our story, Jesus feels our pain, and has sent his word to heal us and proclaim full acceptance in the beloved."

Written with snappy dialogue and realistic urban street language, Rain is a Preject is really an evangelistic bildungsroman being released inclusively for both a Christian and secular internet audience. The book is available for download on its website, www.rainisapreject.com, as well as its author's website, www.earlmiddleton.com.

"The new buzzword in the media world is 'content,'" observes Middleton. "And the new frontier is the internet. We believe God has given us a mandate to publish the gospel in every arena using all available means until the kingdoms of this world become the kingdom of our LORD and His Christ. We're just doing our part to get God's content into the new frontier and provide healing for hearts & lives broken, and sometimes shattered, by parental rejection."
